DR. PAUL SAMUELSON is an Institute Professor of Economics at M.I.T. For his contributions to economic knowledge, he recently received the Nobel Prize. Before that, he was famed for several achievements. He is the author of the most widely-used economics textbook of all time. It has been translated into several languages, and it is credited with having helped to give the world a common economic language. Professor Samuelson has been a consultant to the U.S. government since 1941, and was a principal Economic Advisor to President Kennedy. He was a member of the National Task Force on Economic Education from 1960-1961, which authored the seminal Task Force Report and inspired "The American Economy" television series in 1963. He holds a Ph.D. from Harvard University and honorary doctorates from several of America's most prestigious institutions. He has received many other prizes, has authored hundreds of articles in professional journals, and is a member of numerous professional and honorary societies.

DR. PHILLIP SAUNDERS, primarily an economic scholar, has made several forays into the field of education: He has authored several transparencies and student workbooks as well as an economics text and a book of readings for high school students; has conducted several institutes for secondary teachers of economics; and has been a consultant to the Pittsburgh schools as it endeavored to identify effective ways to teach high school economics. Perhaps more significantly, he has conducted numerous research projects in an attempt to assess the impact of economics teaching at the college and high school levels; and he has conducted research institutes for Directors of Centers for Economic Education to help them conduct research more effectively. Dr. Saunders is Professor of Economics at Indiana University.

DR. DONALD OLIVER is Associate Professor of Education in the Graduate School of Education at Harvard University. He is best known as the co-author of the Harvard Curriculum Project, which is helping to transform social studies classrooms across the country. He has been a public school teacher, and a demonstration master teacher, in addition to his more recent roles as professional educator and curriculum writer. Professor Oliver has won numerous honors, and is a member of several professional societies.

DR. JOHN JAROLIMEK, Professor of Education at the University of Washington, has acquired a considerable reputation as an author of elementary social studies. He is a frequent contributor to widely-read teachers journals, and has written articles for publications of the National Council for the Social Studies. His recent Readings for Social Studies in Elementary Education has sparked the same high level enthusiasm as his earlier text, Social Studies in Elementary Education, now in its third edition. He is broadly experienced as a classroom teacher, supervising teacher, teaching principal, and principal. Dr. Jarolimek now serves as President of the National Council for the Social Studies.
